THE WAR REVENUE TAX

Not Likely to Be Disturbed This Session of Congress.

INTERESTS THAT SEEK RELIEF.

Druggists, Brewers and Patent Medicine Makers Are Complaining. Presidential Possibilities in the Senate.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—[Special.]—The war revenue law is not going to be disturbed at this session of congress, although a large number of people and representatives of large interests are making every effort to have a reduction of some if not a repeal of all the taxes levied by the act. But it is not only late in the session to begin revenue legislation, but the majority of the Republican leaders believe it is entirely inexpedient. No satisfactory reduction would be made. The interests which failed to get the benefit of the reduction would be greatly disgruntled, and from a political standpoint it is not deemed advisable to go into a campaign with a tariff bill to explain on top of other issues which are none too popular just now. Druggists and manufacturers of drugs and medicines and proprietary articles, etc., are making most vigorous and numerous complaints. Congressmen are flooded with letters asking for legislative relief from stamp taxes. The brewers, who were made to pay $1 more per barrel by the war revenue law, are seeking a reduction, while numerous other interests are asking the repeal of portions of the law which affects them. Some of the demands are based upon the financial burden and others wholly upon the annoyance caused by the affixing of stamps to documents, etc.

Next Session Promises.

Some of the congressional leaders seem to think that during a short session there may be a modification of the war taxes and say that by that time congress and the country will have more information as to what is wanted than now. Besides it is pointed out that it would be utterly impossible to pass a revenue measure of any kind now without greatly extending the session, an extension that most congressmen desire to avoid. Congress as a whole would like to adjourn before the national conventions, and the eyes of the Republican leaders are fixed upon the middle of June as the latest satisfactory date. Between now and that time there are the appropriation bills to pass, the Porto Rican conference to be disposed of and the Philippines under the Spooner bill, besides numerous other measures, like the shipping bill, Alaska and Hawaiian legislation, which are crowding to the front. To take up a tariff bill now would mean a session lasting far into the summer, interfering with the presidential and congressional campaigns, consequently all demands for a reduction of the war revenue will be met with promises for legislation next winter, if still found necessary.

Presidential Possibilities.

The present session of congress has developed several presidential possibilities in the senate, but scarcely any in the house. Since the retirement of Reed it is not likely that there is in the house now any person whom a considerable number of people would regard as of presidential size or who has yet attained that prominence before the country to be considered a possibility in the near future. In the senate there has been a development of presidential timber this session which can be drawn upon in the future if not needed immediately. There has always been such timber in the senate, and the names of Allison, Cullom, Davis, Depew and Hoar have been either actually before conventions or prominently mentioned in connection with the presidency.

To this list may now be added the names of Fairbanks of Indiana, Lodge of Massachusetts and Spooner of Wisconsin. Indiana may also be credited with a possibility in the person of Senator Beveridge, if his ambition equals his industry and perseverance, as well as his absolute confidence in himself. It would not be strange if the west should concentrate four years hence upon the "little giant of the Badger State," John C. Spooner. He has developed into one of the leading figures, not only in his state and party, but in the country. No more able debater or stronger man intellectually has been found in the present session, while his conservatism and common sense are qualities which win for him the respect of his associates and all others who know him. Both Lodge and Fairbanks are coming men, or it may be, both have arrived, and all of these furnish their party a wealth of material from which to choose a president in the early campaigns of the twentieth century.

Congressional Notes.

"I had an unbroken record of nine years," said Senator Proctor of Vermont, "and then I broke it when I moved the other day that the senate adjourn." To Senator Pettus of Alabama is due the credit of forcing adjournments. He never allows a session later than 6 o'clock, except under extraordinary circumstances. Those who want to remain later must maintain a quorum and beat the Alabama man by a vote.

Really funny men have disappeared from the house, John Allen of Mississippi, who was once known all over the land as a humorist, refuses to make funny speeches, and there are few who can take his place. This gift of humor is said to be fatal to political advancement.

AMERICAN CONSUL GROSSLY INSULTED

Gottfried Horribly Tortured by Peru Revolutionists

STRUNG UP BY THE THUMBS

Rebels Demanded Money and Arms. When He Refused to Comply He Was Knocked Down and Placed in Flying Stocks.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—An amazing story of indignity inflicted upon an American representative abroad has been disclosed by a resolution offered in senate by Mr. Penrose of Pennsylvania, which calls upon the state department for information and documents relative to the case of Edward Gottfried of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., consular agent of this government at Truxillo, Peru.

In a sworn statement, which has been filed with the department, Gottfried asserts that he was seized by Peruvian revolutionists in the summer of 1899 and subjected to torture, in addition to which his horse was seized and killed.

The volunteer demanded that he produce 5,000 sols (between $1,500 and $1,000), and 25 rifles within 30 minutes, or submit to chastisement in what is termed in Peru the "flying stocks." When he said he was unable to comply with the demand he was knocked down by a blow from a gun and overpowered. His thumbs were tied together with twine and his hands twisted back of his head. Heavy rifles were inserted between the inverted elbows and his head and in that position he was strung up. In a short time the agonizing pain rendered him insensible. The torture was resumed until Gottfried agreed to the demands made on him.

Gottfried has filed an itemized statement of the damages he sustained, which approximate $250,000. His attorneys are now in Washington, and it is intended to force Peru to make suitable reparation and apologize for the insult to the American flag.

The Mystery of Life.

"His life is simply a living death." "Yes; he's a living example of the impossibility of living on so small an income as his!"—Detroit Journal.
